1. Things That Went Well

- Paced-up the work in back-end
- Better time-management and communication amongst group-members towards the end of the sprint

2. Things That Could Have Gone Better

- Communication from some of the group members could have been better in the start of the sprint.
- Some members should have taken more initiative in terms of taking up tasks and could have been better at managing time.

3. Things That Surprised Us

- Backend was able to cover up a lot of work in a short period of time.

4. Lessons Learned

- Good communication, planning and organisation are keys to a good project
- Time commitment and managing that time well is really important
- Equal distribution of tasks helps in pacing-up the project and better outcomes

5. Final Thoughts

- Initially, it got really hard as some of the members were not active and taking initiative to complete the backend tasks assigned to them. This made the situation very stressful and Janhvi had to get started with backend alone. After informing and consulting Liza and Homy, our team improved on the issues and came back on track and paced-up the work and worked on the tasks assigned.
- We should continue with the effective communication and planning we had towards the end of the sprint and keep a similar or better pace of the project.
